

Street Corner

By Janet Channon

A great big giant walked down the street,
He looked pretty strange and he had big feet,
He stopped at the corner to rest for a while,
You could have heard the music for nearly half a mile.

'Cause he could improvise,
And he could harmonise,
And he would roll his eyes,
And he would play, play, play
And he would improvise,
And he would harmonise,
And he would roll his eyes,
Then he would play, play, play.

A tired old man walked down the road,
He carried his shopping, struggling with the load,
He stopped at the corner to rest for a while,
You could have heard the music for nearly half a mile.

'Cause he could improvise.....

A little mouse came running in tiny little feet,
He was in such a hurry, a friend he had to meet,
He stopped at the corner to rest for a while,
You could have heard the music for nearly half a mile.

'Cause he could improvise,
And he could harmonise,
And he would roll his eyes,
And he would play, play, play
And he would improvise,
And he would harmonise,
And he would roll his eyes,
Then he would play, play, play.

A big crowd gathered at the corner of the street,
Everyone was dancing to the steady beat,
They stopped at the corner to rest for a while,
You could have heard the music for nearly half a mile.

'Cause they could improvise,
And they could harmonise,
And they would roll their eyes,
And they would play, play, play
And they would improvise,
And they would harmonise,
And they would roll their eyes,
And they would play, play, play.
